Gould Track Team Meets
South Paris

Badly crippled by the ineligibility of three of its best runners, the Gould track team journeys to South Paris today (Thursday) where it will compete with South Paris High School at 3 p. m. The loss of Don Brown, high jumper and dash man, Mellen Kimball, one of the county's best milers, and Stan Harvey, promising middle distance runner, upsets the balance and scoring power of the Gould team to a great extent.

Entrants include only two lettermen. Keniston and MacFarland, and are as follows:

100 yd. dash—Robertson, Hatch, and Holt.

220 yd. dash—Robertson and Hatch.

440 yd. dash—Holt and Billings.

Half mile run—MacFarland and Bartlett.

Mile run—R. Grover and H. Gro-Shot put—Johnson, Howe, Holt, Discus—Keniston, Johnson, Holt, Hammer throw—Thurston and Johnson.

Javelin throw—Howe, MacFarland, Holt, and Tucker.

Pole vault—Morrill and R. Grover.

High jump—Keniston, Tucker and R. Grover.

Broad jump—MacFarland, Howe.

The Gould track team is slated to meet Norway High School at Norway on May 19 and to enter the Oxford County Track Meet to be held at Hebron Academy on May 28.

Gould Defeated in 10th

Gould Academy lost a tough game to Livermore Falls last Saturday 9-8 in the tenth inning. It was a hard game to lose because Gould held what looked to be a safe margin of victory 8-5 going into the ninth inning. However, the home team went on a batting rally, coupling a base on balls with two singles and a double to tie up the score.

Wagner gathered three hits for the winners while Dick Crockett led the Bethel team with three also. Mallett and Heath connected for two hits for Livermore with Brown of Gould getting two. In the fourth inning Clayton Crockett's one hit drove in two runs while Keddy's only hit in the eighth drove in two more.

Except in the first inning when Livermore scored four runs and in the ninth when they scored three, MacFarland pitched excellent ball. ## Bethel to Have Two-Way Air Mail Service One Day

Plans have been completed for the special Bethel-Lewiston air mail flight which will take place on next Thursday, May 19, as announced in the Citizen last week. The plane, piloted by Roland Maheux of Auburn, will leave the Lewiston-Auburn airport at 9:45 and arrive at the West Bethel flying field at 10:20. Leaving at 10:35, it reaches Lewiston at 11:10. These hours as given by Postmaster Herrick are Standard Time. The plane will carry mail both ways.

All air mail received at the Bethel office after the east bound mail closes Wednesday afternoon and until it is taken to the plane at West Bethel Thursday morning will be taken on this direct flight, except such mail as will reach its destination more quickly by other routes. It is understood that such mail will be carried by the special plane if so marked.

All air mail leaving the local post office during Air Mail Week, May 16-21, will bear the special cachet of this office. This is of circular design 2 1-3 inches in diameter, picturing a mail plane and worded "National Air Mail Week. Twentieth Anniversary of Air Mail Service, May 16-21, 1938. Sponsored by Chamber of Commerce, Bethel, Maine."

For those wishing mail bearing their local mark and carried by plane from Bethel the department states "Air Mail presented at any post office addressed to the same point on the flight where each letter will be backstamped and returned to office of address by most convenient service."

If so designated mail for the special flight may be mailed ahead of time and held at the office. If the weather is such that the plane trip is not practical, the flight will be made on the next suitable day that week. The new Air Mail stamps will be released Saturday.

The Mothers' Club met Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. Evans Wilson with 19 adults and 11 children present. Following the regular routine of business the following program was carried out. Roll call, answered by the names and brief history of Maine Poets and Musicians; Paper, Export Mothers, Mrs. P. C. Lapham. Mrs. P. J. ## The SNAPSHOT GUILD AGAINST THE LIGHT

This scene was snapped against the light, so shadows come toward the camera. Ordinary exposure gives the silhouette effect. A lens shade must be used—if direct sun rays strike the glass, they spoil the picture.

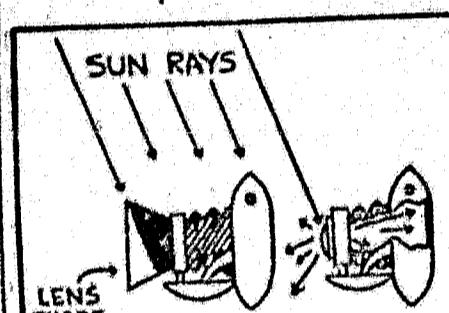

HAVE you ever tried taking pictures "against the light"—that is, with sun or photo lights beyond the subject so that the shadows point toward you instead of away from you?

This lighting is a source of many interesting pictures. Striking silhouettes of trees and persons can be obtained. Sunlight, coming from above and slightly behind the subject in an informal portrait, gives appealing highlights on hair and shoulders. Numerous "different" effects are possible.

When you take such pictures, your lens must be shaded so direct rays of sunlight or artificial light do not strike it. An inexpensive lens hood or sun shade (see diagram) is very useful, and slips on easily. Indeed, it is an advantage to use such a shade for many pictures. It cuts out stray sidelights and reflections, giving brighter, "snappier" pictures.

Of course, when the sun is low in the sky—almost on a line with your lens, the hood may not help, but frequently you can find a position where the sun will be hidden behind a tree trunk. Then the shadow of the tree will serve to shade your lens.

In "against the light" pictures,

shadow side, use an exposure two or three times as long.

For informal portrait studies, with the sun back of your subject, arrange a sheet of white cardboard or cloth so that it reflects light on the subject's face. And when the sky is the background of your picture, use a sky filter on the lens. This darkens the sky a bit and makes sunlit subjects stand out. It also shades the lens just as the sun shade does.

On Thursday, May 5th, the second annual Girls' Glee Club Concert took place in the William Blengham Gymnasium before a very large and extremely appreciative audience of students, parents and friends. In addition to selections by the Girls' Glee Club, several declamations were given by some of the girls who received high rank in this work at the Academy, and finally a group of selections in choral reading was given by the entire Freshman Class. This last number was especially interesting, due to the fact that Gould Academy is one of the few secondary schools in Maine at present using choral reading in connection with the fundamental speech work for freshmen. The hard work of constant practice, under the excellent tutelage of Miss Ruth Levengood, director of speech and vocal music at Gould Academy, by the members of the girls' glee club of 66 members produced one of the finest pieces of vocal entertainment ever offered at Gould Academy and too much credit cannot be given the work of those who gave declamations for their intelligent interpretation and easy delivery of their various readings. The choral reading was done with evident appreciation of the various subjects, displayed an ease and lack of nervousness usually evident in the first public appearance of the individual boy or girl and evidenced a fine sense of rhythm, enunciation, and pronunciation on the part of the group.

ALLISON GRAY responded abstractedly to old Doctor Connor's professionally cheery good-night, switched off the porch light, and stepped nervously through the lighted hallway into the glare of the living room. She stood revealed a pathetically dispirited figure, her breath rushing excitedly through her open, trembling lips as she gazed dazedly at the prescription she held in her hand.

Old Doctor Connor in handing it to her had tersely directed: "Have your husband get this filled and give the child a teaspoonful in a little water through the night, or until her fever leaves her," but her pride had come up in her throat, choking her when she had attempted to say that Joe was out and would not be home in time. She rebuked herself now for her timidity. How easy it should have been to say, "My husband will not be in until late. May I ask you to leave it at the drugstore to be filled and delivered?" No need to have said where Joe was or why he would be late. No explanation was called for.

Well, she could call a Western Union messenger, unless—perhaps she could recall the doctor even yet and make the request easily. But no, the doctor's rheumatic, mincing gait had already taken him out of earshot. She thought she could see him now at the corner, talking to someone. It was hard to distinguish figures clearly in the dense tree shadows.

but the other man looked like Joe. Couldn't be, however. She knew too sadly well that Joe had gone to the minstrel show.

SHORT SHORT STORY

Complete in This Issue

Now Joe had no faults to speak of. Even in her heartbreak this night she acknowledged his dearness. Most lovable, tender, whimsical of fellows, he had his being in a zone of warmth and light and cheer and good-fellowship which seemed to emanate from him. Joe—why, that was Joe on the steps now. The first glad thrill of recognition faded before doubt of his mission. Perhaps he had forgotten something—cigars, maybe.

But no—when she opened the door to him he asked for the prescription and strode away. Then it had been he talking with the doctor on the corner!

Allison moved quickly about, heated water, crushed ice, collected such articles as she might need, and climbed the stairs to her bedroom.

Mary Alice was there in her crib tossing about and moaning, burning hot. The baby cheeks were ominously flushed, the blue eyes unwholesomely brilliant, the lips unwholesomely pallid.

"Mother's here, precious one," murmured Allison, soothingly, but a fretful mumbling was the only response.

She had just finished sponging the burning little body and laid an ice-pack on the hot brow when Joe came in.

"Here's the medicine. What can I do now?" looking down compass-sionately at his tiny daughter. "Poor little Queen of Hearts. The old Doc says it may be nothing very serious, but—"

"You're going to stay home, Joe?" tremulously.

"Sure," matter-of-factly.

The long summer night seemed unending. The baby tossed and moaned. Occasionally lulled by the croon of Allison's gentle mother voice—"Ah, darling, it's all right now"—she slept in snatches.

It grew cooler. They pulled the window down. Just as the first faint gray appeared at the horizon, Joe disappeared for a few minutes, returning with toast and hot malted milk. Touched by this thoughtfulness, Allison confessed her doubts of him. He gravely extended the forgiveness she besought.

"It's pure selfishness, I guess," he said, "but since we're married I never can enjoy anything much unless you are there too. I rushed down to turn the tickets in and get my money back. I didn't know but what the baby might be right sick and we'd need every cent. Anyway, it'll come in handy later to get tickets to something we can see together."

"Together, Joe—that's just it. The togetherness of married life's the best part of it, don't you think so?"

"Sure. I learned that when you were helping me last winter with those wage computations. No clerk I could have hired!"

"Muvver—Daddy—" It was the peevish, cross voice of a child who has experienced bodily discomfort, but its normality fell upon their parental ears like a siren's sweetest song. "I'm hungry."

And the dawn stealing into the room suffused their faces with infatible light.

THE LOW DOWN from HICKORY GROVE

I was skimming through the paper the other day and I see where out there on the Coast, they had an election and those web-footed there, they voted against going into partnerships with the Govt. in the power business.

So it looks like it is not just in Tennessee that the Govt. has its hands full. And if the folks out there in Oregon do not want the power I guess it is another dead horse.

You take an ordinary person and let him get into a jam, and the law will grab him till he straightens things out; and if the Govt. gets itself into a jack-pot, and runs into debt—head over heels—it should be the same.

And the geezers we elect to office, if they had to make up the loss on stuff they promote, but which does not pan out, we could breathe easier. And if these persons do not have the cash to make up the deficit, they could work it out, at so much per day.

Some kinds of business, they may not be so grand and rosy right now, but boy, the deficit business, it is booming.

Yours, with the low down,
JO SERRA

London First Introduced

Fingerprints in Trials

Fingerprints were introduced, "for the first time in history," as important evidence in a murder trial at the Old Bailey—London's famous criminal court—in May, 1905. Scotland Yard had been experimenting for ten years with them and had some 80,000 fingerprints in their files, but never before had this "new peril to law-breakers" (as it was referred to in the newspapers) been used in a murder trial.

The accused were two brothers named Stratton. They were charged with the murder of an old couple. One of the brothers had left a thumb-print on a cash box. When the prosecution announced that the police were going to try to convict on that evidence, "there was a thrill round the court"—to quote the authors of "King's Counsel: The Life of Sir Henry Curtis-Bennett." Curtis-Bennett, then a young lawyer, appeared for one of the brothers.

The judge did not take to the fingerprint system whole-heartedly, and seemed to want murderers in the future to use ink when they left their impressions on cash boxes.

"When proper impressions are taken, the system is extremely reliable," he instructed the jury; "but it is a different thing to apply it to a casual mark made through the perspiration of a thumb. The evidence is not so satisfactory as it is, for instance, the murderer had taken some ink and made a definite impression. But to a certain extent, the evidence is corroborative. The jury will not like to act on this evidence alone."

The brothers were hanged.

Electric Chick Brooders Are Simple, Safe and Economical

Counterbalanced on a rope, this electric colony-type hover easily can be inspected, cleaned and adjusted.

ALTHOUGH the hen was and is the natural brooder of her chicks, modern mass-production methods have resulted in the development of numerous substitutes including those heated by coal, oil, wood, gas, steam and hot water. But, where high-line service is available, brooding with electricity is preferable for several reasons:

It requires little time to install and regulate the hover; the fire hazard is practically eliminated; the temperature under the hover is automatically controlled; less labor and attention is necessary; mortality usually is lower; the chicks healthier, stronger and better feathered; and the overall cost generally is less than that of other sources of heat.

There are two distinct types of electric brooders—colony and battery. The colony brooder is commonly used by the average poultryman as well as the farmer who raises only a few chicks each year. The battery brooder is used chiefly by custom hatcheries and broiler producers.

As a great deal of moisture is given off by the chicks through respiration and from droppings, adequate heat and some system of ventilation is necessary to keep the litter dry under the colony-type electric hover. Two kinds of ventilation are used in such brooders: The gravity, or natural; and the fan forced-air system.

Garden of Eden Language

as Described by Darwin

Writers of many different nationalities have claimed that their language was the one spoken in the Garden of Eden, says London Answers Magazine.

In 1580 a man named Goropius declared that Dutch is the language spoken in Paradise, and therefore that Adam talked Dutch. Andre Kemp, on the other hand, believed that the Almighty addressed Adam in Swedish, and was answered in Danish, while Eve spoke French.

If this were so, how did Adam and Eve get along when they talked to each other?

The Persians are also generous in awarding three languages to the Garden of Eden. They believe that the Serpent used the most persuasive tongue, Arabic; that Adam and Eve used Persian, the most poetic of tongues; while the Angel who drove them from the Garden used Turkish, the most threatening of tongues.

Naturally, the Jews claim that Hebrew was the primitive language. This theory had most votes from Eastern writers, the next on the list being Syriac; but claims have also been put in from other parts of the world.

A writer named Erro plumps for Basque as Adam's language; others declare that Polynesian was the primitive language of mankind.

It seems more than probable, however, that none of these languages was spoken in Eden, because none of them was then in existence.

The first men are more likely to have conversed by means of signs and cries than through the medium of any known tongue. This is the opinion of no less an authority than Charles Darwin, who thus recorded his view of the matter:

"I cannot doubt that language owes its origin to the imitation and modification, aided by signs and gestures, of various natural sounds, the voices of other animals, and man's own instinctive cries."

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

When Bill Boardman gives up his private detective agency and goes back to his old job as special investigator for the district attorney, his wife, Sally, determines to show him that the agency can be a success. Her first client, Lola Fraser, quickly entangles Sally in a murder mystery when Walter Fraser is mysteriously killed in Jerry Marlowe's apartment.

Over Bill's strenuous objections, Sally launches an independent investigation to solve the murder, working at cross-purposes with her husband. Sally solves first when she points out to Bill that the Marlowe butler must be implicated in the murder. He is. She scores again when she eludes a detective assigned to watch her and gains admittance to the Fraser apartment. There, she steals a letter from under her husband's nose and runs off with it. Armed with a search warrant, Bill searches their apartment for the missing letter—all to no avail. Sally then goes to Lola Fraser, hoping that the letter will lead to more important discoveries. Lola destroys the letter but offers to give Sally another clue. Before she can tell it, however, Sally discovers a dictaphone, planted by her husband, and snips the wires.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
Chapter Five

When the dictaphone suddenly went dead, Bill and the district attorney became concerned. "I don't like that," Bill said. "Come on! Let's go upstairs."

Sally meanwhile was listening to a radio recital of the events of the murder night. "When I went to the phone just before the shot was fired that night," Lola said, "I heard someone on the line."

Sally snapped her fingers. "The butler!" she cried. "I knew it all the time."

Lola shook her head. "It wasn't the butler," she said. "I know his voice."

"What was he talking about?" Sally asked eagerly.

"He was talking to the district attorney about gambling," Lola said.

"About gambling? It must have been Shane. He spoke to the district attorney about that time. He must have been in Marlowe's apartment."

The apartment door was opened suddenly and Bill strode in followed by the district attorney and two policemen. "All right, you two!" he said. "You're going to headquarters both of you!"

Sally looked at him contemptuously. "Snooper!" she said.

Down at headquarters Bill quickly got the information he wanted from Lola. She admitted that it was Shane's voice they had heard in her apartment. He was there, she said, pressing her for payment of fifty thousand dollars she had lost to him at roulette. She admitted, too, that before she met Walter Fraser she had been engaged to Shane.

While other detectives were questioning Sally, Bill and the district attorney sifted the information they had gleaned from Lola. "How about Shane?" Bill demanded impatiently.

The Third Degree Falls

The district attorney took Shane down. "Shane is a gambler," he said. "He uses strong arm methods to collect—they all do."

Bill shrugged. "I'm going in and see how the boys are making out with my little Bright Eyes," he said.

The boys were not making much progress with Sally. Working in relays they were using all the known methods to wear a person down but Sally remained bright and cheerful despite it all. For four long hours they had been at it but all they had to show for it was a fine case of jitters for themselves and a girl who appeared oblivious to it all.

A tired and willed detective walked into Bill's office some hours later and fell into a chair. "Shit of using a rubber hose on her," he confessed dejectedly. "I give up."

The district attorney turned to Bill. "I'm going to see if I can't have you any influence with her?" Bill started for the door. "I'll try once again," he said. Sally greeted him with a hug and a kiss. "Hello, darling," she said. "Gosh, I love you."

Bill spoke to her slowly and quietly. "Listen, honey, this is a serious matter," he said. "A man has been murdered. The killer must be found."

"If you'd let me out of here," Sally offered, "I'd find."

Bill shook his head. "This is a police matter," he insisted. "You must work with us. You must tell us what you know—what Lola told you. If you do—I promise to go back to the agency and have another try at it."

Sally Told All

"Cross your heart?" Sally asked. Bill crossed his heart. "Well," Sally said, "Lola told me that she heard Shane's voice on the phone talking to the district attorney a moment before the shot was fired."

Bill stared at her. "Shane!" he cried.

Sally nodded vehemently. "Of course!" she said. "I told that fat-faced boss of yours about Shane at the beginning—but he wouldn't listen."

Bill jumped up and kissed her hastily. "Bless you!" he said. "He started for the door and Sally ran after him. "Hey! Wait for me," she cried. But Bill was too quick for her. He closed the door and locked it from the other side and then rushed to the D. A.

"Lola Fraser heard your conversation with Shane on the Marlowe telephone!" he cried.

"But you checked their phone and—"

"I don't know how Shane did it yet but I do know that his call to you was planned as an alibi! That means Shane is the murderer!"

The district attorney looked at Bill dubiously. "Why?" he said. "That's what your wife told me."

Bill laughed. "Even so," he said. "It sounds logical. I've got her locked up in the private office. Keep her there until I can run this lead down."

For the next two hours Bill staged a rapid and intensive search for Nick Shane. He visited all of the places that Shane ordinarily frequented but to no avail. Meanwhile, Sally fretted and raged in his locked office. A sudden inspiration caused her to phone to Marlowe's lawyer and explain her predicament.

Within an hour he appeared at the district attorney's office and, in the absence of the D. A., secured Sally's release from an underling by presenting a writ of habeas corpus.

Without waiting for the lawyer, Sally dashed from the building and drove off in a taxicab for her apartment. She opened the door and switched on the living room light. "Bill!" she called. She stopped and stared. There was a heavy aroma of perfume in the air. "Where are you, Bill?" she called again. She crooked to the closet and opened the door. Then she screamed at the top of her lungs.

The body of a man slowly toppled out of the closet and fell to the floor. It was Nick Shane and on the floor of the closet, Sally saw a bloody knife.

Bill picked up the knife, stared at it for a moment and then toppled to the floor, too. She had fainted.

Bill, unsuccessful in his hunt for Shane, had forced his way into the gambler's apartment. In a pocket of Shane's coat he found some shavings of a dark, rubberized substance clinging to an instrument that looked like an oversized pair of eyebrow tweezers. Triumphantly he wrapped his discoveries in a handkerchief and hurried off to the Marlowe's apartment.

The policeman on duty there admitted him and Bill hurried over to the French windows leading to the terrace. Outside, he looked around and found the telephone box-in-wire. As he expected, one of them had been freshly taped and, beneath it there was a section of wire snared clean.

Bill ran to the phone and called the district attorney. "Hello, Chief," he said. "I've busted the Fraser case wide open. Shane just where we want him. But you can't guess where I'm calling from."

"No, I can't," the district attorney answered grimly. "But you'd better get home. Nick Shane was just found murdered in your apartment!"

Egg-Laying Devices in Insects

Ingenious and protective egg-laying devices in insects result from the driving force of organic life, retention of the species by propagation. The young are usually born after the mother has died or disappeared. But she provides for the first meal of the insect when she lays its egg, protects the egg itself from weather, water and other insects. The female of the foliage grasshopper, of the family Deicticus verruciferus L., has a long sword-shaped laying tube by which it pierces the ground to leave its eggs. Many grasshoppers sheath their eggs in a frothy mass which comes from the intestines and hardens in the air. Sometimes the froth egg packet is attached to a stone; occasionally it is carefully placed in broken-off raspberry stalks in such a manner that the froth has the appearance of the pith of the stalk.

Invented Metric System

The metric system was an invention of the French in the latter half of the Eighteenth century. The French government appointed a committee of the Academy of Sciences under the authority of the national assembly sanctioned by Louis XVI to devise a system of weights and measures. On June 22, 1799, the standard units, the meter and the kilogram, made by expert scientists and instrument makers, were deposited in the archives at Paris.
